PALETTE

Near-black forest green carries the depth that grounds everything. Fresh sage is your accent — a deliberate brightness against the deeper tones. Use the darkest tones as dominant and let sage appear with intention, not as scatter.

Deep forest greens from near-black to fresh sage — organic, grounded, and quietly confident.

VISUAL DIRECTION

Luxe and refined — elegant proportions, quiet restraint, and a premium feel. Says a lot by doing less.

A warm voice inside a refined visual system creates welcome tension — the design is restrained, the words are human, and together they feel more accessible than either would alone.

A note on your logo: you don't need a custom mark to build a recognizable brand. Many successful small businesses use their name set in their primary typeface as a wordmark, applied consistently across every surface. That is a real brand asset, and it scales from a business card to a sign to a social profile without the execution gaps that come with a symbol-based mark applied inconsistently. When you're ready to work with a designer on something custom, bring this Style Guide — it gives them your palette, your type direction, and your visual language in one document.

TYPOGRAPHY

Source Serif 4 and Inter fit polished client-facing materials—proposals, decks, and your site. Each block shows your business name in regular, bold, and italic at a restrained scale.

PRIMARY TYPEFACE

Source Serif 4

Source Serif 4 leads proposals and premium site heroes; keep weight changes minimal so the system feels expensive.

STYLE PRINCIPLES

- 01 Consistency is the luxury signal — same spacing, same type scale, always
- 02 Let the work and proof do the talking; ornamentation is secondary
- 03 Quiet confidence: restraint communicates premium better than decoration
- 04 Every visual choice should reinforce the credibility of your work
- 05 Consistency between your website, LinkedIn, and the documents you share with clients is where a visual direction becomes a recognizable brand

DO / AVOID

Do

Keep consistent grid spacing and margins across all your materials

Choose one typeface family and use weight and scale for variety

Apply your palette and type consistently to any client-facing documents — proposals and follow-up emails are brand touchpoints too

Don't wait for everything to be perfect before putting the brand into market — consistency at 80% quality is more valuable than perfection that keeps getting pushed

Avoid

Avoid decorative elements that don't add meaning or hierarchy

Avoid inconsistent margins, unpredictable layouts, or competing visual focal points

Avoid visual complexity that competes with credibility — the person should be the most recognizable thing, not the layout

IMAGERY DIRECTION

Imagery stays restrained and elevated: controlled palettes, refined composition, and quality over quantity. Every frame should feel considered—nothing loud or cluttered. For a professional presence, headshots and cover images should match this direction—specific, not stock-generic, with setting and wardrobe echoing your palette.

WHERE TO APPLY THIS FIRST

START WITH LINKEDIN: APPLY YOUR PALETTE (FOREST_DEEP) AND STYLE DIRECTION (LUXE_REFINED) TO YOUR PROFILE, COVER IMAGE, AND ANY PINNED CONTENT.

- 01 Extend to LinkedIn, personal website, email: keep colors, typography feel, and image style consistent across all active touchpoints.
- 02 Keep product photos and brand imagery on a backdrop that matches your style direction — light and neutral for minimal styles, textured or warm for organic or earthy directions.
- 03 When in doubt, use your primary palette color for any branded headers or call-to-action elements.
